On October 21st, results were release from two studies conducted by the National Renewable Energy Laboratory on the effects of E15 on marine engines showing that the gas and ethanol blend can cause issues including drivability, materials compatibility, increased emissions, and long-term durability in outboards, stern drives and inboard engines. The study showed E15 caused damage to 2 out of 3 outboards and complete failure in the Mercury Verado 300HP engine.
